Wildfowl 54

In its 55-year history, the Wildfowl & Wetlands Trust's (WWT) journal Wildfowl has published nearly 900 scientific papers. This body of work has focused on the ecology, biology and conservation of wildfowl (Anseriformes) and ecologically associated waterbirds such as waders, rails and flamingos. More recently, we have also published research into wetland ecology, where this is directed towards the conservation of waterbirds, and critical reviews that shed new light on areas of theoretical ecology or conservation. Short field survey reports have also been encouraged where they can be applied to conservation outcomes. The papers published in this edition of Wildfowl continue this research focus and I hope that you find the topics interesting, valuable and informative.

As usual, my thanks go to the authors who submitted material for Wildfowl 54, as well as to the many referees and WWT staff who gave so generously of their valuable time and knowledge. I also owe a great debt of gratitude to the hard work and endeavour of the Wildfowl editorial team, Clare Lee and Rosie Ounsted.
